When child dies, a parent is still tied to that child.
Souls, tied together across universes. It doesn't matter the age when they passed. It doesn't matter how long ago it happened.

It doesn't matter—none of it.

Their souls are forever tied.

That's the love of a parent. That's the love that is more powerful than death. That's the heart that breaks and keeps breaking until their arms are filled again. It knows no discrimination based off age, health, or time, it just is, and it always will be. Their souls are forever tied, and there's nothing that can break them.

That's the beauty of unconditional love.
